November 07, 2021

Ordinary people serving an extraordinary God.

Tate just got married. Where has all the time gone?

Alpine Church ladies honored Halie and Charles on Saturday.

The church also got to meet and honor their families and friends.

Help us plan for 2022. Attend the budget meeting on November 21 at noon.

If you're heading down south to Big Bend National Park or Terlingua and want to get on some accessible trails, don't pass up a hike through Grapevine Hills. This outand-back is a little over two miles round trip and leads to the well-known Balanced Rock, the picturesque monolith located at the end of the trail. Grapevine Hills is not far from the Panther Junction Visitor Center, located off of the gravelly Grapevine Spring road about six miles in. This is a popular destination within the park and is clearly marked on all official maps. Four wheel drive vehicles are not needed for travel on Grapevine Spring road, but it is advised to take things slowly if driving a car with lower clearance. Park in a designated spot off of Grapevine Springs road and head out, but don't forget to wear desert appropriate clothing and fill up your canteens - there is little to no shade along the majority of the sandy and washed out trail. The only part that may give some trouble occurs farther along close to Balanced Rock, but nothing that is terribly strenuous. It's about a 2 hour jaunt to the Grapevine Hills trailhead from the Alpine Church of Christ building, so be sure to plan accordingly. Once out of Alpine, there are no amenities such as food or gas stations until you reach Study Butte. This trail is an easy one for park visitors to check off their Big Bend list, and a great way to warm up for longer hikes during your stay down south. (Joe Ed)
